

Kim Johnson,

This is not a request. This is a demand for immediate executive intervention by the California Health & Human Services Agency into one of the most grotesque miscarriages of justice ever inflicted on a San Diego family.

Malaika and Xayah Robinson remain separated from their mother, father, grandparents, extended blood family, and younger siblings they have never even been allowed to meet. This separation continues under a parental-rights termination produced by a child-welfare system running rabid with power, retaliation, false reporting, coercion, and contempt for constitutional rights.

Our family exposed case fixing, fabricated psychological narratives by people with no medical license, pressure placed on a three-year-old child without independent representation, retaliation over protected speech, disappearing visits, manufactured accusations, restraining orders, and repeated distortion of the truth to justify continued family separation. We exposed it publicly and refused to remain silent. The response was not accountability. The response was more retaliation.

Secretary Johnson, CalHHS sits above the California Department of Social Services, and your agency publicly claims advancing the well-being of children and youth as one of its strategic priorities. That mission means nothing if a county child-welfare system can inflict catastrophic psychological and emotional harm on children while state leadership looks the other way. [?]

California Department of Public Health

Evelyn Lopez completed what Child Welfare demanded and progressed to months of unsupervised visitation with her daughters. We have a social worker recorded telling her, in substance, that if she moved out of my home her children would be returned, but if she remained there they would not. San Diego County had already approved me and that same family home through RFA for placement of Malaika and Xayah. Instead of reunification, the pressure intensified.

The retaliation is impossible to ignore. Agency reports themselves repeatedly focus on our website, public speech, podcasts, flyers, Board of Supervisors appearances, recordings, and other protected activity. Then visits disappear, accusations appear, family members are removed, and restraining orders follow. Government authority does not become lawful simply because the people abusing it hold government titles.

Meanwhile, Malaika and Xayah continue showing the damage. Our family documents screaming, severe meltdowns, head-banging, hospitalizations, abuse concerns, and children begging not to leave their mother. A neurotherapist conducting a bond study personally witnesses Malaika suffer a meltdown lasting more than 25 minutes because she does not want to leave her mother and return to the mean caregiver. She also exposes that social workers would close their laptops five to ten minutes before visits ended, before the worst trauma began when the girls realized they had to leave their mother, and reports then portrayed everything as normal. She warns of catastrophic psychological and emotional harm from severing these family bonds. The termination stands anyway. The harm continues.

Look at the photograph included with this material. Malaika and Xayah are holding pink signs that say I Love Mom while a sheriff's deputy stands nearby outside the doorway. Yet the same government system continues severing them from their mother and family. How dare bureaucrats call this protection while children openly display their love for their mother and experts warn that separating them is causing catastrophic harm.

What should alarm your office is the sheer scale of government involvement against one family. Social workers, supervisors, County Counsel, the guardian ad litem's office, appointed attorneys, investigators, multiple judges, and private citizens have become part of a case generating thousands of pages of reports, accusations, restraining orders, hearings, and more than two years of family separation. The scale itself demands intervention from above the county level.

Malaika and Xayah's great-grandmother died during the chaos and relentless pressure surrounding this case. She died without seeing the girls returned to their family. The destruction reaches across generations.

I have repeatedly reached out to state and federal officials and agencies, including the White House, the President, the First Lady, the Vice President, attorneys general, elected officials, investigators, and oversight offices. I will continue putting this evidence before anyone with authority to act. I will not give up, surrender, or stop fighting for Malaika and Xayah while this harm continues.

I am demanding that CalHHS use every lawful authority available to force an immediate independent state-level review of the retaliation, false reporting, coercion, abuse of authority, handling of abuse concerns, interference with protected speech and familial association, RFA placement decisions, restrictions on family visitation, and the circumstances surrounding the termination of parental rights.

Preserve the records. Examine the recordings. Examine the reports. Examine the conduct of the agencies operating beneath your authority. Determine why warnings of catastrophic harm were ignored and why this separation continues.

Do not send this back to San Diego County to investigate itself. Do not reduce this to another complaint referral. Executive oversight means acting when the system below you fails.

Malaika and Xayah have a mother, father, grandparents, siblings, cousins, and an extended family that continue fighting for them.

Reverse this wrongful termination through every lawful avenue available. End this retaliation. Bring Malaika and Xayah home.

Please be advised that this letter and supporting materials may be published online or made available to journalists and the public to document this case, preserve the record, obtain independent review, seek accountability, and ensure that what is happening to Malaika and Xayah is never buried, rewritten, forgotten, or denied.
