

ATTORNEY GENERAL ROB BONTA
RENEWED FORMAL NOTICE AND DEMAND FOR IMMEDIATE ACTION
MALAIKA AND XAYAH ROBINSON

Attorney General Rob Bonta, your office has already been placed on notice concerning what is happening to Malaika and Xayah Robinson. This renewed formal notice is being sent because the harm continues, the family continues fighting, and the evidence demanding independent state scrutiny continues to grow.

The people involved in this case are not acting as neutral child-welfare professionals. The record documents retaliation, abuse of authority, escalating restrictions on family contact, and the use of restraining-order proceedings against people who continue speaking publicly about what is happening. Those proceedings carry consequences far beyond visitation, including restrictions on liberty, contact with family, and constitutional rights. Meanwhile, Malaika and Xayah continue screaming, clinging to their family, suffering emotional collapse after visits, and showing catastrophic damage caused by prolonged separation.

This does not involve one employee acting alone. Social workers, supervisors, County Counsel, guardian ad litem representatives, court participants, caregivers, and private citizens are involved at different stages of this case. Decisions continue moving in the same direction, away from reunification, away from family placement, and toward permanent separation, even as the family continues producing recordings, medical records, witnesses, videos, expert testimony, and other evidence contradicting the narrative being used against them.

The original placement itself demands scrutiny. These children remain separated from an available family network and placed with private caregivers while an RFA-approved paternal home remains available. The family describes this as an orchestrated taking because multiple actors continue working in concert while the children's bonds with their own family are restricted and severed.

The retaliation intensifies as the family speaks publicly. As recordings, photographs, reports, and public criticism expose the conduct of people involved in this case, visitation is restricted, new accusations appear, family members are removed from contact, and restraining-order proceedings are pursued against people who continue speaking. That chronology is documented and demands independent examination.

Our children are not harmed or abused in their family home. The serious medical problems, sexual-abuse concerns, severe emotional distress, screaming, clinging, behavioral collapse, and documented catastrophic psychological harm arise only after Malaika and Xayah are removed from their family and placed under the control of the San Diego County child-welfare system. That timeline cannot be ignored. The system claims to protect these children, yet the most serious documented harm occurs after the government takes control of their lives and separates them from their family.

Evelyn Lopez now has newborn twins in her care. Authorities also tried to track down her babies, but they remain with their mother. That contradiction is impossible to ignore.

Evelyn can raise her newborn twins, yet Malaika and Xayah remain permanently separated from her and are denied the chance to come home, live with their mother, and grow up knowing their new baby siblings as part of one family. The same system that claims permanent separation is necessary allows the mother to safely parent two younger children. Malaika and Xayah continue losing irreplaceable time with their mother, their siblings, and their entire family while that contradiction remains unresolved. It is deeply disturbing, and the Attorney General should examine how this outcome is being justified.

At the same time, serious medical and sexual-abuse concerns involving the children are not handled with comparable urgency. Hospital records, medical findings, disclosures, behavioral evidence, and the lack of a full forensic response remain part of the record. The system aggressively pursues allegations that support continued separation while concerns pointing toward what happens to the children in placement are minimized or left unresolved.

There are witnesses outside this family. Investigative reporters know this case. Advocates and activists know this case. Licensed social workers in another state know this case and have reviewed portions of the record. School board officials publicly call attention to this case, and the matter is raised more than once before the San Diego County Board of Supervisors. This is not a private family complaint sitting in isolation.

Your own Bureau of Children's Justice states that it exists to protect the rights of children in California's foster-care and adoption systems and to investigate systemic problems affecting vulnerable children. This case presents exactly the kind of record that demands independent review: retaliation by government actors, abuse of authority, interference with family relationships, unresolved child-safety concerns, use of restraining orders against outspoken family members, and permanent separation despite available family.

I am demanding that your office examine the full record, including the recordings, agency reports, medical documentation, expert testimony, restraining-order proceedings, RFA records, visitation history, court filings, communications among the participants, and the chronology surrounding the family's public disclosures and the retaliation that follows.

What is happening to the Robinson-Lopez family is egregious and demands immediate intervention. This is not a bureaucratic mistake that can be explained away while two children continue losing their family. The record raises serious concerns about unlawful retaliation, abuse of government authority, interference with family rights, suppression of evidence, failure to protect children, and coordinated conduct that may carry civil and criminal consequences. The Attorney General should not allow this atrocity to continue while the evidence sits in files and the children remain separated from the people who love them. Stop the ongoing harm, investigate the conduct of every public and private actor involved, preserve the evidence, and take whatever lawful action is necessary to protect Malaika and Xayah and restore accountability.

What is documented in this case cannot simply be buried, ignored, or treated as though no one is accountable. Public authority does not place anyone above scrutiny. The recordings, medical records, court filings, expert testimony, witnesses, videos, and documented chronology remain, and they will continue to follow this case. Every person and institution involved should understand that the family is preserving the record, pursuing every lawful avenue available, and demanding accountability for the decisions and conduct that continue harming Malaika and Xayah. Time does not erase the evidence, and silence does not erase responsibility.

Malaika and Xayah are still separated from the people who love them. The harm is still occurring. Their family is still fighting. The termination of their parents' rights is wrongful, the girls remain trapped in the system, and this family is not going away.

This is not another request to forward a complaint back to the same agencies whose conduct is being challenged. It is a renewed demand for independent state scrutiny and accountability.

For the record, this letter and supporting materials are being preserved. This correspondence may also be published online so there is a clear public record that the California Attorney General is again placed on notice.

"I Love Mom": San Diego Girls Forced to Say Goodbye During Final Visit After Judge Terminates Mother's Parental Rights

California's Court Crisis - It's Extreme

JULIE M. ANDERSON HOLBURN | JUN 04, 2026

SAN DIEGO, Calif. - On June 4, San Diego mother Evelyn Lopez and her two young daughters were brought together for what family members describe as their final visit after a San Diego Juvenile Court judge terminated Lopez's parental rights on May 26.

The final visit took place at the Sheriff's Station, located at 11486 Campo Road in Spring Valley, California, where photographs obtained by Unveiled and Uncensored show Malaika, who turns 5 in November, and her 3-year-old sister Xayah holding handmade pink signs bearing messages including "I Love Mom." Family members say the children were emotional as they said goodbye to the only mother they have ever known and loved.

The visit came just days after newly appointed San Diego Juvenile Court Judge Devon L. Lomayesva terminated Lopez's parental rights despite years of visitation records, emotional video footage, and expert testimony that supporters say documented a strong and loving bond between the children and their mother.

On May 29, Lopez and her attorney filed an appeal challenging the ruling and seeking further review of the court's decision.

The developments have intensified public scrutiny of California's family and dependency court system and raised renewed questions about secrecy, due process, family separation, and governmental accountability.

According to records reviewed by Unveiled and Uncensored, San Diego County visitation reports repeatedly described Lopez as loving, nurturing, emotionally attentive, and appropriately bonded with her daughters. Yet the same dependency system ultimately sought and obtained an order permanently severing her parental rights.

Photographs from the final visit have quickly become symbolic of the central dispute surrounding the case: whether a court should permanently sever a parent-child relationship when county records, visitation observations, emotional video footage, and expert testimony documented an ongoing maternal bond.

For supporters of the family, the image of two young girls holding signs reading "I Love Mom" outside a Sheriff's station only days after their mother's parental rights were terminated raises broader questions about family preservation, judicial decision-making, and the extraordinary power dependency courts exercise over the lives of children and families.

In addition to pursuing an appeal, family members say they are actively seeking legal representation to explore potential civil claims against San Diego County and Child Welfare Services arising from the handling of the case.

They are asking attorneys, civil rights organizations, legal advocacy groups, and others willing to assist with the matter to contact the family regarding potential representation, appellate support, or further legal review.

For now, Evelyn Lopez's fight to remain connected to her daughters continues in California's appellate courts. While appellate proceedings can take years to resolve, those close to the case hope additional media attention and legal scrutiny will bring greater examination of what they believe are profound questions involving family preservation, due process, governmental accountability, and the dependency system's extraordinary power to permanently separate children from their biological families.

How to Help

As Lopez's appeal moves forward, those questions are now likely headed to California's appellate courts.

This ongoing series on the California family and probate court and CPS corruption crisis - and the broader nationwide family court crisis - aims to bring national attention to systemic failures and to advocate for meaningful reform and accountability.

First, San Diego County's child-welfare fraud and foster-prison machine kidnapped Malaika and Xayah. Then it came after her twins. How many Robinson children does this machine believe it is entitled to target before it finally leaves this family alone?
