

FORMAL NOTICE TO CONGRESSMAN MIKE LEVIN

Constitutional Violations, Government Corruption, Fraud, Deliberate Falsehoods, Abuse of Power, Retaliation, Judicial Accountability, and the Continuing Harm to Malaika and Xayah Robinson

Congressman Mike Levin,

I am Ricky G. Robinson, paternal grandfather of Malaika and Xayah Robinson. This letter places you and your congressional office on formal notice of serious constitutional violations, documented retaliation, judicial misconduct concerns, and the continuing separation of two young children from their family through San Diego County's dependency system.

For more than two years, our family has fought to protect these children and preserve their relationships with their mother, father, grandfather, siblings, and extended family. Their mother, Evelyn Lopez, completed her reunification plan and participated in months of unsupervised visitation while enduring relentless intimidation and harassment by a social worker assigned to her case. Following an emotionally devastating visit with her children, the social worker blocked her exit, subjected her to a prolonged lecture, and refused to let her leave despite her repeated requests. She was pressured to separate from her family, subjected to repeated telephone calls, and confronted during her therapy appointments. Rather than supporting a mother working to reunify with her children, the very agency responsible for reunification subjected her to conduct that raises serious concerns about coercion, intimidation, and abuse of authority.

Evelyn has since given birth to twins, two siblings Malaika and Xayah have never even met. Their beloved great-grandmother also died during this devastating family separation, never living to see the girls return home. Nevertheless, Evelyn's parental rights were terminated, family relationships continue to be severed, and the children remain separated from the people they love.

Our family possesses extensive recordings, videos, correspondence, medical documentation, court records, and witness testimony that challenge the official narrative. These materials document the children's distress, raise serious questions about the conduct of child-welfare personnel, and support our demands for an independent investigation.

An expert neurotherapist testified about the children's strong family bonds and the catastrophic psychological harm associated with severing those relationships. Her testimony also addressed social workers closing their laptops rather than documenting the children's severe emotional distress following visits. The oldest child experienced a prolonged meltdown lasting approximately 25 minutes, expressing that she did not want to return to the non-blood-related caregivers because they were mean to her. These documented episodes raise urgent concerns about the children's emotional safety, their reports of mistreatment, and the failure of responsible officials to protect them. Despite this expert testimony and the evidence of continuing trauma, the separation persists, and the children remain with caregivers whose treatment of them demands independent investigation.

I have publicly identified and criticized social workers, attorneys, supervisors, and judges whose actions I contend continue to violate our constitutional rights. Following that public criticism, I remain excluded from visitation, restraining orders continue to restrict family relationships, and administrative proceedings threaten my Resource Family Approval. The ongoing retaliation, recorded statements, and documented sequence of events demand immediate investigation into violations of my First Amendment rights.

The Fourteenth Amendment also matters. Government officials cannot disregard due process, manufacture narratives of danger, or destroy family relationships without lawful justification and meaningful judicial scrutiny.

Yes. That belongs in the paragraph because it explains what you're exposing, not merely that you're publishing information.

I am establishing an ongoing public record of this case, preserving recordings, correspondence, court filings, and other evidence while selectively publishing materials that expose misconduct and demand accountability. The public deserves to know what government officials have done to Malaika and Xayah Robinson, their mother Evelyn Lopez, their father Keenan Robinson, their grandfather Ricky G. Robinson, and their elderly, dependent great-grandmother, who died during this devastating ordeal. This record exposes serious concerns about the concealment of reported sexual abuse, physical mistreatment, and catastrophic psychological and emotional trauma, while officials continue portraying the children as happy and thriving in their placement despite documented evidence of their distress.

The retaliation has extended beyond the family, drawing an investigative reporter and family advocate into the controversy and subjecting her to accusations after she began exposing what was happening. This is not simply a custody dispute. It is an ongoing account of how government power is being used against an entire multigenerational family and those who speak out in its defense. The public has a right to examine that record and demand accountability.

I am also aware of a broader Petition for Redress of Government Grievances reportedly being presented to congressional offices, including yours, concerning judicial accountability. Our family's experience reinforces why citizens are demanding meaningful action when courts and government agencies are accused of abusing their authority.

Congressman Levin, judicial independence is not immunity from accountability. When credible evidence raises questions about constitutional violations, retaliation, denial of due process, and harm to children, elected officials have a responsibility to demand answers and pursue lawful oversight. Wrongful court decisions must be challenged, examined, and corrected through every available constitutional and legal mechanism.

I demand that your office initiate and pursue a comprehensive federal investigation into every individual and agency involved in this case, including allegations of criminal misconduct, corruption, deliberate falsehoods, case-fixing, retaliation, abuse of government authority, violations of the First and Fourteenth Amendments, and the systematic destruction of human dignity. This investigation must examine the conduct of social workers, attorneys, supervisors, judges, and all others responsible for the continuing harm to Malaika and Xayah Robinson and their family. I demand criminal accountability wherever the evidence establishes wrongdoing, immediate intervention to protect these children, and urgent action through every lawful avenue to overturn wrongful decisions, restore their family relationships, and return Malaika and Xayah home. Your office must provide a substantive written response identifying the investigative and oversight actions it will pursue.

Our family has endured years of separation, escalating legal proceedings, and extraordinary emotional harm. Malaika and Xayah continue to live with the consequences of decisions that deserve the highest level of scrutiny.

I have pursued review in the California Supreme Court as a self-represented grandfather. I continue documenting these proceedings because no government official, attorney, social worker, or judge should be beyond accountability.

Congressman Levin, you are now on formal notice. The evidence exists. The public record continues to grow. The constitutional questions remain unanswered. These children deserve protection, their family deserves justice, and the American people deserve accountability from the institutions operating in their name.

I am deeply ashamed that the United States of America, a nation founded on constitutional liberty and justice, allows government institutions to inflict such devastating harm on children and families while those responsible evade accountability.

This formal notice, together with any response or failure to respond from your office, will be documented and made available to the public as part of the ongoing public record. Transparency and accountability are not optional when the safety, dignity, and constitutional rights of children and families are at stake.

"I Love Mom": San Diego Girls Forced to Say Goodbye During Final Visit After Judge Terminates Mother's Parental Rights

California's Court Crisis - It's Extreme

SAN DIEGO, Calif. - On June 4, San Diego mother Evelyn Lopez and her two young daughters were brought together for what family members describe as their final visit after a San Diego Juvenile Court judge terminated Lopez's parental rights on May 26.

The final visit took place at the Sheriff's Station, located at 11486 Campo Road in Spring Valley, California, where photographs obtained by Unveiled and Uncensored show Malaika, who turns 5 in November, and her 3-year-old sister Xayah holding handmade pink signs bearing messages including "I Love Mom." Family members say the children were emotional as they said goodbye to the only mother they have ever known and loved.

The visit came just days after newly appointed San Diego Juvenile Court Judge Devon L. Lomayesa terminated Lopez's parental rights despite years of visitation records, emotional video footage, and expert testimony that supporters say documented a strong and loving bond between the children and their mother.

On May 29, Lopez and her attorney filed an appeal challenging the ruling and seeking further review of the court's decision.

The developments have intensified public scrutiny of California's family and dependency court system and raised renewed questions about secrecy, due process, family separation, and governmental accountability.

According to records reviewed by Unveiled and Uncensored, San Diego County visitation reports repeatedly described Lopez as loving, nurturing, emotionally attentive, and appropriately bonded with her daughters. Yet the same dependency system ultimately sought and obtained an order permanently severing her parental rights.

Photographs from the final visit have quickly become symbolic of the central dispute surrounding the case: whether a court should permanently sever a parent-child relationship when county records, visitation observations, emotional video footage, and expert testimony documented an ongoing maternal bond.

For supporters of the family, the image of two young girls holding signs reading "I Love Mom" outside a Sheriff's station only days after their mother's parental rights were terminated raises broader questions about family preservation, judicial decision-making, and the extraordinary power dependency courts exercise over the lives of children and families.

In addition to pursuing an appeal, family members say they are actively seeking legal representation to explore potential civil claims against San Diego County and Child Welfare Services arising from the handling of the case.

They are asking attorneys, civil rights organizations, legal advocacy groups, and others willing to assist with the matter to contact the family regarding potential representation, appellate support, or further legal review.

For now, Evelyn Lopez's fight to remain connected to her daughters continues in California's appellate courts. While appellate proceedings can take years to resolve, those close to the case hope additional media attention and legal scrutiny will bring greater examination of what they believe are profound questions involving family preservation, due process, governmental accountability, and the dependency system's extraordinary power to permanently separate children from their biological families.

How to Help

As Lopez's appeal moves forward, those questions are now likely headed to California's appellate courts.

This ongoing series on the California family and probate court and CPS corruption crisis - and the broader nationwide family court crisis - aims to bring national attention to systemic failures and to advocate for meaningful reform and accountability.
